CURRICULAR PROCESS IN DISTANCE EDUCATION

“The introduction of distance course is an innovation which is full of promising results in extending education to people hitherto unable to benefit by it, in containing the growing demand for places in the universities and colleges and in the general improvement of standards. The corresponding method of instruction makes it possible for students with concentration and discipline to become better-instructed graduates than those at present produced in some of the affiliated colleges. This is true at the school stage correspondence course. The Indian Education Commission, 1964-66 has rightly said, “There must be a method of taking education to the millions who depend upon their own effort to study, whenever they can find time to do so. We consider that correspondence or home-study courses provide the right answer for this situation”. With the changing times the scope of distance education has expanded in the Indian education system. By offering education outside the conventional classroom pattern, distance education attracts a wider range of students every passing year. The reason is that due to paucity of time it sometimes becomes difficult for some learners to pursue academics. Distance education courses offer a solution to such problems, allowing learners to pursue higher education from the comforts of our homes and offices. Distance learning courses are self-explanatory and interactive. The study material is designed in such a way that all one needs to do is to devote only a part of one’s spare time to study the self-learning material and complete the course. However, this task requires motivation, planning and the ability to analyse and apply the information being taught on the part of the learner. With the aid of this book the learners will be able to discuss various concepts related to distance education and would be able to evaluate various distance education programmes being offered in different universities. The book of distance education is written in a self-instructional format and divided into five units. Each unit begins with an introduction to the topic followed by an outline of the unit objectives. The content is presented in a simple and easy to understand manner. This self-instructional material included with progress questions to test the learner’s understanding.
